Download Zapgrab - ZapGrab is a very easy-to-use for capturing the whole or only a part of the screen.You only have to press the Cmd + Tab key to select the area of your desktop that you want to capture and press the Print Screen key.Q: Linux MD (multiple device) - How to restore device I have three hard drives in my system, /dev/sda, /dev/sdb and /dev/sdc. All have the same UUID, /dev/sda1, /dev/sdb1 and /dev/sdc1, etc. Yesterday I accidentially ran'mdadm --create /dev/sda1 /dev/sdb1 /dev/sdc1', and from then on, when I turn on my system, I get an error, saying that /dev/sda1 is busy and that /dev/sdb1 and /dev/sdc1 aren't found. I can't find any references to this online, and any sort of'restore' command doesn't work (eg, I tried running'mdadm --assemble --scan /dev/sda1 /dev/sdb1 /dev/sdc1' but it just reboots the system, which I'm not sure is the desired result). Is there any way to restore my system to a previous state where these MD devices are working? I could attach each drive to my system via USB and then try and copy /dev/sda1, /dev/sdb1 and /dev/sdc1 to the correct locations, but I was hoping there was an easier way to do this. Also, if anyone knows where I can find a list of common MD devices (i.e. what they are supposed to be used for) it would be much appreciated. A: Short answer: Boot to a livecd Open terminal and cd /proc/mdstat rm sda1 sdb1 sdc1 Long answer: Mount your drives echo 0 > /sys/block/sd[a-c]1/queue/resume_offset See:
