There is proposed in Japanese Unexamined Patent Publication (Kokai) No. 2-226062 a technique in which a type of surface mounting module for mounting an integrated circuit chip in which an IC chip is encapsulated with a resin is obtained by encapsulating the periphery of a chip with a mold and thereafter pressing the top surface of the chip with a solidifying member and pressing the chip with an upper mold. According to this technique, the pattern of the upper mold is provided with sufficient venting regions so that an excess of molten resin is prevented from flowing back to the chip. In consequence, the chip is not exposed to a high temperature and is encapsulated in an ordinary temperature during molding. According to the above technique, however, since an excessively large amount of resin is required to fill up the mold cavity, it is necessary to have a pressure nozzle having a large diameter for applying the pressure. Consequently, when using a pressure nozzle having a large diameter, it is impossible to apply uniform pressure to the entire chip, and it is very difficult to encapsulate the chip in good reproducibility. In addition, since the injected resin is taken away by the force of a pressure applied by the pressure nozzle, it is impossible to apply an optimum pressure to the chip, and there is a possibility that the chip is not encapsulated in good reproducibility. Furthermore, since the surface of the resin becomes roughened by the pressure nozzle, a smooth mirror surface cannot be formed on the top surface of the chip, and therefore the top surface of the chip cannot be set in a correct position with respect to a mounting substrate. According to the surface mounting module obtained by encapsulating the chip with a resin and pressing the chip with an upper mold, the chip is likely to undergo a damage during mounting, especially when mounting by soldering.Q: How do I use values from one column in a regex match in another column in the same file?

I would hope that my life is far from dramatic but I have found myself living a life filled with drama. More often than not the drama is all about me. When I was younger there was a distinct lack of drama and that was fine. I preferred keeping my head down and saving my drama for the people that asked for it. I was smart. I could hide behind the veil of my ignorance. Then I hit adulthood and suddenly those feelings of never having anything to do with "the drama" were out the window. Maybe my roommate has issues so I. I did not care because, to borrow a phrase from a very wise man in my life, "What's the big deal?" It's the first week of November. The leaves are falling from the trees. They are a dull gray and a reminder that although we had a mild winter we are really only in spring. School starts in less than two weeks. I am in the fall of my senior year of high school and college beckons as my future appears as clear as the fall leaves. It's too bad that the ceiling just above my head and the floor just below my feet are crumbling as I write this. They are showing the effects of almost a decade of no maintenance. The damage I am describing is in my room at home and it is very important for me to get it fixed. I will explain why. Not because I want to go to a fancy college or because I want to live on a houseboat and ride my bike to work. No, I am giving myself credit for being smarter than that. I want to study animals at a state university and teach for a few years before moving on and doing the same thing. The problem is the floor under me will eventually crumble and fall into my room. That's all I really want to do. I want to have a nice room for a few years and then
