Using state-of-the-art imaging and a new approach to analyzing brain tumors, researchers at Washington University School of Medicine in St. Louis have discovered a previously unrecognized type of brain cancer that causes seizures and is so aggressive that it has a survival rate that's almost zero. "The new brain tumor we discovered is a very rare and aggressive form of cancer," says senior author Sarah-Jane Moses, PhD, a neuroscientist at the Siteman Cancer Center. "It's far more deadly than the types of cancers that are typically diagnosed by primary care physicians." Moses and her colleagues used a patient-friendly technique called "atlas-based registration," which allows a machine to register pictures of the brain into a standardized coordinate system. Using this technique, they were able to find tumors with barely detectable changes in the anatomy of the brain. "In previous studies, brain tumors are usually discovered by a doctor who looks at a scan of the brain and assumes that the abnormality has to be a tumor," says first author Katherine L. Kuzmic, MD, a neurosurgeon and radiologist in the Siteman Cancer Center. "We designed this study to be accessible to all practicing doctors, and we thought we would be able to find tumors that have been missed by other imaging tests." advertisement The team discovered a rare tumor, designated 'ganglioglioma,' that makes up 0.03 percent of all brain tumors and represents about 2 percent of primary brain tumors that can cause seizures.
