To evaluate the effectiveness of endoscopic dilatation in the treatment of different obstructive diseases of the esophagus in children. From 1994 to 2005, 22 children with different obstructive diseases of the esophagus were treated with endoscopic dilatation. There were 4 cases of esophagitis, 4 cases of esophageal cancer, 8 cases of esophageal stenosis and 6 cases of gastroesophageal reflux disease (GERD) of mixed type. Endoscopic dilatation was used to dilate the stenosis of esophagus, and repeated dilatation was used to treat the progressive disease. The effectiveness of dilatation was assessed in 6 months after dilatation. In 4 cases of esophagitis, the symptoms were relieved completely after one session of dilatation. In 2 cases of esophageal cancer, partial esophageal stenosis and wall thickening of esophagus after surgery were dilated completely. In 4 cases of esophageal stenosis, the stenosis was dilated completely. The average time of operation was 24.5 minutes. In 3 cases of GERD of mixed type, the symptoms were relieved after dilatation, but in 1 case of esophageal cancer with GERD, stenosis was dilated again. Endoscopic dilatation can dilate the stenosis of esophagus and is the first choice for the treatment of esophageal stenosis in children. It is effective for esophagitis and esophageal cancer with stenosis.Q: Why do different browsers treat and tags differently? This will not be a question about the specific language. I was looking at the line in a web page. I ran the page in FireFox and saw that the id was correctly interpreted as foo, and then I ran the same page in Chrome and IE and saw that the id was interpreted as bar. Why did they give the id different meanings? Why was that only a difference in my browser? A: This is the way browsers have decided to implement the HTML spec (HTML
