Metabolic Syndrome and its Associated Risks: A Study on the Utility of the IDF and NCEP ATP III Criteria in Iranian Adults. The relationship between metabolic syndrome (MetS) and its related cardiovascular disease (CVD) risk factors is well established. This study aims to investigate the relationship between the metabolic syndrome, its components and associated risk factors using the IDF and NCEP ATP III criteria. This cross-sectional study included 3,955 subjects over 30 years of age from Hamadan, Iran, in 2011. MetS was diagnosed using the IDF criteria, and its components were evaluated using the NCEP ATP III criteria. The overall prevalence of MetS was 28.1% using the IDF criteria and 9.8% using the NCEP ATP III criteria. MetS using the IDF criteria was significantly higher in females compared to males (p < 0.05).
