

The film was released on 28 November 2006 and grossed over ₹20 million in its opening weekend. Plot The story of the film revolves around Guru Dutt (Shahid), a former elite British Army soldier who returns to India in the early 1950s. He is a handsome, charming, intelligent and brave man, who is known for his bravery. Once, during an ambush, he is wounded in the leg, but manages to escape from enemy fire and, at great risk, reaches a native village to call for help. At the village, Guru Dutt becomes close friends with a young girl, Rani (Romy), and is captivated by her devotion and sincerity. When Guru Dutt visits Rani's father and insists on marrying Rani, the father refuses and challenges Guru Dutt to return to him the next morning with an army platoon for his son's release. Guru Dutt returns to the village the next day and brings with him a platoon of British soldiers, armed with rifles. The next morning, the village is surrounded by a British platoon and Guru Dutt is taken to the village headman, who insists that Guru Dutt demands too much and that he must release the father of Rani at a price. On hearing this Guru Dutt refuses and tells the headman that if he wants the man's son, he will get him and his platoon of soldiers to take the man away from the village. The headman gives in and agrees to let Guru Dutt take his son. Rani's father is then brought to Guru Dutt's tent to meet him. When they meet, the father is so overwhelmed that he sheds tears in front of the great soldier. He asks if his son is a great soldier, to which Guru Dutt says that he is not only a soldier, but also a great lover of Rani, and then asks for permission to marry her. The father agrees and they start the wedding ceremony. When the ceremony is complete, Guru Dutt's platoon starts shooting, killing the headman and most of the villagers and forcing the survivors to go to a place called "Bala" (the "Ball"), a deserted site near the village. Meanwhile, when Rani and her mother learn about the massacre, they plead with Guru Dutt to go after the headman and ask him not to harm Rani. Guru Dutt refuses, explaining that Rani is the only thing that he loves in this life
