Allogeneic peripheral blood stem cell transplantation in patients with lymphoma. The clinical benefit of allogeneic stem cell transplantation (SCT) in patients with lymphoma has been a matter of controversy for a long time. Recently there has been an increase in the experience of single centers in second allogeneic transplants and, in particular, the double transplants. Although second transplants were initially performed to overcome the high transplant-related mortality (TRM) occurring in the first transplant, it seems that the introduction of less toxic preparative regimens has improved survival outcomes in the second transplants. Some patients with lymphoma may be cured by an autologous SCT, but, in these patients, allogeneic SCT should be considered in first remission and when relapse occurs after autologous SCT. Myeloablative conditioning regimens have low TRM in second transplants. In these patients, the use of a reduced-intensity conditioning regimen seems to be associated with higher rates of transplant-related complications, lower quality of life and shorter survival compared with the myeloablative conditioning regimens. With the progression in the understanding of the importance of the graft-versus-lymphoma effect and the use of new strategies to intensify graft-versus-lymphoma effect, these data may change. similar to what we know about heroin, and there is no reason to believe that the marijuana industry is any different in that respect. At this point, we should be treating marijuana in the same way we currently do for heroin. Unfortunately, our current classification of marijuana as a Class 1 drug is not doing that. It's impacting people's lives in unintended ways that are now being realized. We're not talking about decriminalization here. The reason
