Gamesa.cc 07-25-2020, 04:07 AM I prefer to use Windows as a development environment for my C++ project because of the Visual Studio integrated in it. But when I want to test the code on a different machine, I choose to use OS independent Linux operating systems. For my taste, a portable operating system that I can run anywhere is more convenient than Windows. On a Linux computer, it is not easy to use gcc compiler for C++ development. Instead, the most commonly used compiler is g++. If you have been developing in Windows, you will know that there is a g++ compiler integrated in Visual Studio IDE. However, it is not integrated in a Linux IDE. The g++ compiler is a part of the Linux operating system. It is not portable to other operating systems. On the other hand, the GNU compiler is portable and it is an open-source compiler. However, it is not integrated in the Visual Studio IDE. There is no Visual Studio on Linux system. So, for Linux development, I prefer to use the GNAT compiler. GNAT compiler GNAT is the GNU Assembler for Ada. It is the official Ada compiler on Linux system. It was developed by AdaCore. It supports Ada 77, Ada 83, and Ada 95. It is very convenient to use the GNAT compiler in Linux IDE. Visual Studio IDE It is a very convenient IDE that supports both C++ and Ada development. However, it is not portable. It is an IDE for Windows only. It cannot be used to develop on Linux. There is no integrated g++ compiler. It has to use the gcc compiler. It takes some time to learn this IDE. It requires more work to use this IDE. So, it is very inconvenient to develop on Linux. I prefer to use a Linux IDE such as the Code::Blocks IDE on Windows. It can be easily installed on Linux as well. It does not take much time to learn to use. It is very friendly and has great IDE features. Code::Blocks IDE I
