As the title says, I'm trying to submit the same form to different servers. The first is a server without a login (POST to localhost:3001/submit) and the second is a server with a login (POST to localhost:3002/submit). I think this might be able to be done with axios but I'm not quite sure.

axios.interceptors.request.use(config => { let xhr = new XMLHttpRequest(); xhr.onreadystatechange = function() { if(xhr.readyState === 4 && xhr.status === 200){ console.log("success") } } config.method = config.method.toLowerCase(); let headers = config.headers; if(headers && headers.hasOwnProperty('user-agent')) { let userAgent = headers['user-agent']; let userAgentSplit = userAgent.split(" "); if (userAgentSplit[0] === 'chrome') { headers.Authorization = 'Bearer'+ credentials.accessToken; } } return config; }, config => { let error = config.response; return Promise.reject(error); });

How do I redirect to different servers depending on what header the request sends? A: You can always try to build your own HTTP Server that could redirect Internet Protocol (IP) network access servers. IP network access servers provide a number of different types of service to customers. Examples of such services include private network access, virtual private network (VPN) access, firewall services, Internet access, and the like. In many cases, these services require the network access server to access a database that contains configuration information for the service. If the database becomes unavailable or corrupted, the access server may be unable to provide the service to the customer. For example, in a firewall access service, the access server may be unable to determine the customer's ability to access the network to which the firewall protects. For this reason, a number of techniques have been proposed to protect access servers from database failures. One such technique involves replicating the database to multiple servers in a redundant configuration. If one of the servers in the
