Great Cut Crack on iTunes . My expectation is that this is just a fork, though. You'd think that should be easy to check by just refreshing the page and looking at the network packets, but I have not yet figured out how to do so. The relevant parts of the HTML source look like the following: A: This is not an answer to your question, but it may still be useful to other people: If anyone is wanting to perform this same task, you need to become familiar with the "pixel spacing" value for images. If that value isn't equal to 0, your image is being "sprung" or "stretched", and it's really a pixel-for-pixel copy instead of an animated/transitional overlay. Setting the value to 0 for all images on your site will prevent most of this from happening in the first place. I don't have time to explain how to do this at the moment, but here are some links that will get you started: How to make CSS image sprites for website logos CSS sprite tutorial My Beautiful Tumor On a cold and rainy November morning, a post office van pulled up in front of my house and loaded eight of these boxes. It was a new kind of mail for me, and I was more than a little nervous about them. I've had migraines most of my life, and they've sort of been a constant throughout my life. They come and go, and they can be really terrible sometimes. I had one last November, and I still get lightheaded when I'm under stress. They're often accompanied by nausea. Sometimes, I can't walk, I'm so sick. My neurologist and doctor—they both treated me for a few years—were pleased with my number of weeks without 754eb5d184
