The Ginkgo biloba extract EGB761 has been found to possess a neuroprotective effect in several experimental conditions. The present study was performed in order to examine the protective effect of EGB761 on neuronal cell damage induced by glutamate excitotoxicity. EGB761 was administered to male Sprague-Dawley rats at a dose of 200 mg/kg body weight, PO, for 30 days. On day 31, the animals were anesthetized and both cerebral hemispheres were removed. The right hemisphere was used for biochemical analysis and the left one was used for Nissl staining. Glutamate (1.5 mm) was administered into the right basal ganglia for 10 min. A similar amount of physiological saline was injected into the left hemisphere. Brain homogenate from the treated and untreated rats was analysed for malondialdehyde (MDA), reduced glutathione (GSH) and glutathione disulphide (GSSG) levels and for lactate dehydrogenase (LDH) activity. Nissl staining was performed to examine the effect of glutamate on neuronal cell damage. The animals receiving glutamate into the right basal ganglia showed a significant increase in brain MDA levels.
