KOT Xbox One Original Game Loading Screen 25..Australia's service sector is in the grip of a public relations and media storm. One that has been created by a consortium of polluters, oil companies and right wing politicians in a bid to stop the Federal Government moving away from the highly successful and internationally acclaimed Climate change negotiations. In seeking media attention and support they have been slugging it out with the Australian scientific community and ordinary climate change activists. The role of the federal Labor opposition leader and Prime Minister Julia Gillard and her co-operation with the pro-coal lobby has also been problematic. So far we have had the anti-Emissions Trading legislation sabotaged on both Houses of Parliament, a conference organised by the coal industry in which distinguished scientists like Dr James Renwick, former heads of the IPCC have been berated as frauds, and the ongoing media campaign against the credibility of scientists. This includes false claims about the Hansens, the Goldsmiths and the government's own Science Advisory Committee. In the past week the battle has changed tone. It has turned into a full scale media campaign attacking the credibility of the government's own scientists, and the very organisation that has confirmed the seriousness of the current human-induced global warming. The Centre for Advanced Study in the Public Interest (CASPI) is the research organisation, made up of almost 100 distinguished scientists, that has been accused of being an unreliable and corrupt source of news. The reason the CASPI's letter is being attacked is a simple one: it has challenged the contention that the current human induced warming will be catastrophic; their two new, important publications are being misrepresented by the media, and the scientific community, and the Coalition is pouring money into a "counter-campaign" to try and destroy the credibility of the organisation. CASPI's CEO Stephen Trehwella, whose background is in environmental protection, is a prominent and respected member of the Australian academic and scientific community. It's a comment by David Suzuki in the US that 'If you want to help, you want to help the people in the long term, but you can't do it if you don't understand what they're doing in the short term'. Trehwella has a long and distinguished record of success and recognition in Australia and internationally. ba244e880a
