Q: Configuring database connection in Windows Azure I have a website that I am deploying to Azure. I've created a database in Azure and added a connection string to the web.config file in my web app. Here is my connection string: Data Source=tcp:pc.database.windows.net,1433;Initial Catalog=wffdb;Persist Security Info=True;User ID=mylogin;Password=password When I run it locally it connects just fine. In Azure, when I add my database and change the connection string to this it doesn't work: Data Source=tcp:pc.database.windows.net,1433;Initial Catalog=wffdb;User ID=mylogin;Password=password It returns a timeout error. My app pool is set to Integrated and I am using the 4GB of RAM. When I run this in Azure I use the 4GB of RAM, so I would think that if it had enough RAM I would be able to use the connection string above. Any ideas what the problem is? A: You are talking about "in-process" databases, right? So the connection string, as you have it, connects to your local SQLServer, and so there's no need to use a tcp:// connection string. Q: Display only active cronjobs in crontab I'm editing the crontab file using vi. Is there any way to list only the active cron jobs? I want to list the running cron jobs and their triggers without having to open the crontab and look for the ones that were enabled.
