Just a day before I was scheduled to leave to read at the book store, I had a tooth ache. Days later, my cheek was throbbing, red and swollen, and I had it looked into. It turned out I had an abscess and needed two crowns and a root canal. I went to have my permanent teeth pulled, and a week and a half later I finally saw Dr. Like a shark, he eats from the inside out, and when I walked into his office, I was in shock. I didn't want to look at him. I was the flustered, hormonal, stupid girl I'd been for the past two years, and I was sure he could tell. I should have run screaming out the door when I saw the surgeon's name on the black, shiny slip of paper. I should have known something was up when the phone call from the office came at 7:45. It was on a Saturday. I knew I was in trouble. alissa nutting tampa epub download Also, its worth noting that, because I can't remember exactly how the ending plays out, I may have to change a few details for the sake of this story. I mean, it's a story about a girl molested by her brother, so, yeah, I don't see how it could end any other way than badly, right?" 6. What was your inspiration for this book? I honestly can't remember what inspired me to write this book. I do know that I took a lot of flak for doing it, and there were many false starts, long stretches of nothing and a lot of 'what ifs'. I'm not sure exactly what it was that made me finally go for it. 7. What was one of the hardest things about writing this book? Honestly, I've always been a pretty traditional writer, so I can't say it's been all that hard. I'm sure it's been harder for some people. But, just being really self-conscious of the words I'm using, even being self-conscious about whether something's the right word or not. These days I don't take so much as a glance at someone's writing, I read it like someone else would, and judge how well it reads. 8. Do you feel like you have a specific audience in mind when writing? At first I did. It was very "women in trouble" and "
