The TSP1 and TSP2 proteins may be involved in the pathogenesis of uterine leiomyoma. An immunocytochemical study was undertaken to compare the presence and content of TSP1 and TSP2 proteins in uterine leiomyoma and myometrium. Thirty leiomyomas and 15 myometria obtained at hysterectomy from women aged 34-60 years old (mean, 49.4 years old) were processed for immunocytochemical analysis. Positive control tissues were obtained from the testis, placenta, and thymus. TSP1 and TSP2 were present in the smooth muscle of uterine leiomyoma and myometrium. We also observed scattered immunoreactivity in myometrial vessels and perivascular spaces, but not in leiomyoma vessels. The TSP1 and TSP2 proteins were identified in the cytoplasm of the smooth muscle cells of the leiomyoma and myometrium. TSP1 and TSP2 immunoreactivity in the leiomyoma and myometrium was diffuse, but in the myometrium was punctate. The increased immunostaining in the leiomyoma was related to the increased mitotic activity. These results suggest that TSP1 and TSP2 may be involved in the pathogenesis of uterine leiomyoma.
