In the aftermath of the past two nights of grandstanding across the Isreali media landscape, the New York Times has come out with an editorial that does a good job of calling out both sides of the argument. Instead of reiterating the tired, limp arguments of the powerful Likud party, the Times addresses the danger of any such move and how something real could be accomplished for the Palestinians if the US would just cut their kosher ties. Published Thursday, Nov. 10, 2005; 11:09 AM ET "As the anniversary of the expulsion of the Palestinians from their homeland approaches, it is time for Israel to halt this "right of return" campaign and to make clear that any Palestinian refugees who come to Israel for family reunification will find themselves unwelcome, in line with the resolution adopted by the international community at the time of the first Arab-Israeli war in 1948." "...the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees is one of the most effective agencies of human rights. Israel, for its part, should work with the agency to facilitate the return of any Palestinian refugees who are willing to return, and to bring about a fair and equitable arrangement to all Palestine refugees in the region." So, Israel has an obligation to all the Palestinian refugees, and has been working with UNHCR? Don't people always say the UN is all about "good" and not about "bad?" "Israel, along with the rest of the developed world, was affected by the recent tsunami and hurricane relief efforts. As was true in the past, it will be in the forefront of responding to disasters in the developing world. But the same obligation exists: to help deal with human suffering on a global basis, regardless of its location." "What's the matter? Is this some kind of shabbat shalom?" The Times is poking the Likud in the eye and suggesting that a veto against the Palestinian request for UN security council action would be a high price to pay for the illegal expansion of Jewish settlement into the West Bank and Gaza Strip. That the UN is being used to provide "cover" for such brutal expansion is not a new argument. However, the New York Times is giving voice to the economic nationalists now being amplified by the Likud. And, rather than being guided by the law, the economic nationalists have the short-term prospect of devolving into a brutal, opportunistic ethnic cleansing of the Palestinians
