When keystrokes are made, the app can notify you of what was typed. It is important to know this fact, you could prevent accidental clicking on the app's back arrow, as it is often used to get back to the main screen. Also, keystrokes can be made in many other programs, such as text editors, game editors, and web editors. It is always a good idea to monitor the source of any unsolicited or unexpected keystrokes, and these will be reported to you in a notification. KEYMESSAGE Description: This important detail gives you a method to see the most recent activity of your application. For example, if you had keystrokes recorded a while back, you will be able to see the last time those keystrokes were made. This ability will provide you with important insights into how your application is being used, and it may give you some ideas as to how it could be improved. KEYMEHEART Description: If this function is enabled, the application will record the sounds you make while using the application. In this way, you can remind yourself how the application operates, as you will be able to hear how you make selections. KEYMELEAP Description: This will record a quick opening of your application. For example, you could record when you press the app's icon. KEYMELEAVE Description: This function will record when you close the application. KEYMEND DESCRIPTION: Any changes you make while viewing a chart, or while in the EDIT menu, will be recorded when you make the necessary changes, and they can be recalled later. KEYMEWHOLE Description: This application will remember the location of any saved files, and it will automatically send them to you when the application is next loaded. KEYMEWHICKS Description: This function allows you to open any recorded file. KEYMEWHIP Description: This function allows you to open the application's main screen, which is the HOME screen.
