partnership and household poverty affect health in the United States? Data from the national health survey for the years 2000 and 2001 are used to examine the effect of partner and household poverty on health. It is found that, controlling for individual characteristics, persons in poor households have fewer "good" health days, visit the doctor more, and spend more time in hospital than persons in nonpoor households. Women in poor households have fewer "good" health days than men. Persons who live with someone also have fewer health days than those who live alone; their health days are more likely to be bad, however. The results show that the effect of partner and household poverty is the same for men and women. This paper also finds that poor households are more likely to live in regions with greater poverty than less-poor households.

1. Field of the Invention

The present invention relates to improved photosensitive materials containing a silver halide emulsion layer containing a dichroic dye which absorbs light over a range of wavelengths, which is sensitive to monochromatic ultraviolet and/or blue light and which, when it is developed, has a negative image of the image-forming areas of the silver halide emulsion layer exposed during imagewise exposure to monochromatic ultraviolet and/or blue light. 2. Description of the Prior Art Photosensitive materials of this kind in the form of color paper, color hard copy materials and color reversal materials which contain silver halide emulsion layers sensitive to monochromatic blue light are already known, for example from U.S. Pat. Nos. 4,420,543, 4,425,425, 4,518,688, 4,518,689 and 4,561,845. The photosensitive materials of 570a42141b
