I am not sure about the exact type of monitor but here is what I have found to work. Check that the red, green and blue positions are all the same on your new monitor. Make sure that you are not seeing colour shift towards the red or green side of the screen. If you have colour shift with white writing it could be that the settings are incorrect on the monitor and that the position of the black window is not right. If you are seeing that the colour is shifting redwards, then the red on the monitor is higher and if it is shifting greenwards, then the blue is too high on the monitor. This can only be a software issue, as the physical settings of the monitor are correct. First thing that you have to do is check if the color settings on your monitor are the same as the color settings of your old monitor. If they are the same, then you have done everything right. If you are not seeing the color shift towards the right or left, then you need to adjust the horizontal and vertical settings. This should be done by
