CVI is seen as a common cause of morbidity and quality of life impairment. For example, in the leg the saphenous vein (the most common site of incompetence) may become incompetent at a young age. In that case, the valve, which normally prevents blood from flowing back down the vein, fails to do so and blood is forced up and out of the leg and into the space between the leg and the pelvis where it pools (usually in the lower leg or calf) and starts to break down. Over time, more valves become incompetent, making the leg look varicose and causing pain, edema, and leg discomfort. The methods used to treat varicose veins are invasive, and non-invasive methods for treating the condition are in development. Current invasive methods include sclerotherapy, vein stripping, and vein ligation. These procedures are performed in the operating room and require general anesthesia, and are very costly. Non-invasive methods currently available include leg elevation, and leg compression bandages. Leg elevation is of little value in improving venous return, while leg compression bandages (stockings) are uncomfortable, bulky, and generally painful to wear, and may reduce blood flow in those with venous occlusive disease.Q: Set radio input value with jQuery I have this jsfiddle. Why does only the checked radio input's value get set, and not the unchecked ones? Why does it ignore my attempt to set a value on them? A: You are only updating the value of the checked radio. The convergence of ipsilateral and contralateral innervation to the vestibular nuclei was studied by means of horseradish peroxidase (HRP) histochemistry and the anterograde transport of radioactive amino acids. The HRP injection sites were confined to the vestibular labyrinth. The HRP-positive cells were visualized in the nuclei of all three main vestibular nuclei in the cat (nucleus vestibularis lateralis, n. crista transversa, n. caudalis). The numbers of labelled cells in the n. vestibularis lateralis were almost twice as high as those in the n. crista transversa and n. caudalis, whereas no differences could be detected with respect to the densities of the HRP-positive fibres in the vestibular nerves. There were no significant differences in the HRP-positive cell densities within the vestibular nuclei depending on the laterality of the labyrinthine injection sites. The labelling of HRP-positive fibres in the vestibular nerves revealed ipsilateral and contralateral convergence to the vestibular nuclei. The HRP-positive fibres turned toward the inner side of the n. vestibularis lateralis and the n. crista transversa. The axons of vestibular neurons projecting to the ventral vestibular nucleus (n. vestibularis ventralis) turned into the contralateral vestibular nerve and entered the ipsilateral vestibular nerve. There were no HRP-positive fibres passing through the ipsilateral vestibular nerve or entering the contralateral vestibular nerve. The HRP-positive fibres reaching the n. vestibularis caudalis were not ipsilateral or contralateral, but spread uniformly over the dorsal and ventral medullary surface.Q: Quadratic equation in integers I have a problem that I think is simple, but I can't find it in the internet.
