Web Link Extractor is a small, lightweight application that can quickly extract website addresses from a text file. The software can come in handy when you wish to acquire a URL from a messenger conversation history log, for instance, from a long description or from an email message, without reading it all. Quick link finder Web Link Extractor can open a text file and instantly read it, then identify website addresses contained within. All you need to do is import the text file that contains the information you seek, then let the software analyze it. Web Link Extractor only supports.TXT format files, which means that if the input text is saved in a different file type, you first need to convert it to a notepad file. Alternatively, you can just manually transfer the text to a supported file. The results are not displayed in the application's interface, however, they are automatically exported to a.TXT or.HTML file. Filtering text for more accurate results Web Link Extractor allows you to insert certain filters to the URL extraction process, so that even if the software identifies a link, it does not export it if it does not match the criteria. Thus, you can add one of two conditions: a positive action and a negative one. Thus, you can enable the inclusion rule, which causes the result file to contain exclusively the URLs with the specified domain, or the exclusion, which defines the domains that are to be ignored. Moreover, you can set the software to exclude duplicate links and you may enable the link counting. URL filter manager Each condition can be configured for a single domain, so you need to create several rules for more websites. You may easily add more filters, remove them or just reset the entire list or rules. Once you have configured all the preferences, simply click the Save button, then Web Link Extractor can create the file with the results...
