Creating a custom backup routine for your Mac is a good idea. The Mac's built-in Time Machine application works fine, but most people need something more customized, and this is where BackupBuddyX comes into play. All you need to do is select the folders that are going to be backed up, and let BackupBuddyX take care of the rest. One of the things that make BackupBuddyX a great option for creating your own backup routine is that it's available in multiple languages. The program is written in Objective-C, which makes it very easy to integrate into the Mac, and understand. When the app is installed, you will be presented with a dashboard, that you can work with in any way you want. The basic backup functionality is already built into BackupBuddyX. This means that most of the features, and different options can be ignored, and only the ones that matter to you. Your backup routine is built according to the changes that are going to be made to your Mac, and your preferences. BackupBuddyX also allows you to create regular backups, to be used for restoring the backups once the program is done with them. The program is a multi-user application, which means that you can assign multiple users for the backup routine. As a result, it takes longer to boot. The program can also be closed more abruptly. But then again, it's a good thing that your Mac is backed up, and the program is quick about restoring the backup once it's finished. BackupBuddyX Interface: Almost everything is in the same place, and easy to understand. You just need to enter the folder that you want to backup, and select when to start the backup routine. BackupBuddyX Users: There are some unappealing areas in the program. The areas at the bottom of the application can be hard to see. On top of that, the program doesn't seem to minimize to nothing, no matter how much you move the window around. To summarize, BackupBuddyX is a program that is worth using, however, we
