Having gotten my hands on a 4045 earlier this year, I finally got to put it through its paces. I uploaded a copy of The Late Greats 'Any Colour' to the MMSE and ran it through there. This track is a very moody track, with elements of synth and old school rave thrown into the mix, and it seems as though many people were having a great time listening to this last weekend. I didn't get a chance to listen to it myself in a noisy club until this evening (see below for that). When playing the track, the 4045 gets to work very quickly, it has the ability to drive up to about 4K and is able to maintain a good level of detail. Anyone that knows anything about synth and the way these things work will be familiar with how difficult it can be to get a track with a lot of bass to sit in a good position in the mix, and this is where the 4045 really comes to the fore. Even though the 4045 is a good DAC/preamp, you will lose some of the top end, but it seems to preserve the midrange. This is due to the crossover being set in the form of a notch filter, and the low frequency response of the transformer being set to increase the VU meter response to the lowest frequencies, which gives the sound a very smooth, detailed, even response. One of the things that surprised me about this late great track was how few clicks you are able to get out of it in terms of level. The clip seemed to go on forever, but it did offer a really good sound that had a good amount of depth. I also played the track on a pair of Focal Labs 1000v2 speakers, which I think have a lot going for them. I had this pair on some test at
