Case in point: the national and state health departments knew for years that we shouldn't pour liquid into a baby's nose while giving them a vaccine (such a practice has since been banned). But unless we're sure to inform families of risks before, we might not alter the practice, and then the next baby we see with a runny nose is going to be in an ambulance. Wrongful death occurs when someone is killed by an accident or negligence. It's important to understand the difference between wrongful death and medical malpractice. While the person at fault in a medical malpractice case is typically a doctor, what counts for malpractice is the treatment—meaning that a doctor can be held responsible for mistakes he or she makes outside of the treatment. In wrongful death cases, however, the person at fault is the person who killed the victim. In this type of case, the plaintiff can typically recover damages equal to the death benefits paid to the family of the victim. Being prepared is imperative before, during and after a disaster. Before a disaster, it is important to think through what to do (like stock up on food, medications and emergency supplies) should a disaster strike. You should think about who will be affected by the disaster—for example, who are the elderly or the young who will need care after a disaster, and what type of medical services will be needed. And when a disaster strikes, it is important to be prepared to care for yourself

This invention relates to inkjet printers, particularly piezoelectric inkjet printers, and more particularly it concerns a self-cleaning head for an inkjet printer. In a piezoelectric inkjet printer, a plurality of pressure chambers are formed in a nozzle plate of a print head. These pressure chambers are charged with ink and arranged side-by-side in parallel. A piezoelectric element is formed on the surface of the nozzle plate. The piezoelectric element expands or contracts in response to a signal supplied to it to eject ink from the pressure chambers. One of the problems encountered with an inkjet printer is that ink residue tends to accumulate on the nozzles, tending to clog them. Also, ink residue left in the ink supply system is apt to collect in the nozzles and thus clog them. In such a case, ink can not be ejected from the nozzles, giving rise to print failures. Japanese patent publication (Kokai) No. 60-145900 discloses an inkjet print head in which a wiper element is held against the nozzles. The wiper element is driven back and forth across the nozzles when a print head is driven for printing. Thus, it is thought that the wiper element scrapes ink residue from the nozzles. Japanese patent publication (Kokai) No. 3-18789 discloses an inkjet print head which has nozzles provided with a suction hole. An ink suction pipe is connected to the suction hole and communicates with a cap which defines a casing of the print head. When a print head is moved back and forth during printing to eject ink, the suction pipe sucks ink from the nozzles, thus preventing ink from depositing in the nozzles. According to the inkjet print head disclosed in Japanese patent publication (Kokai) No. 60-145900, the wiper element and the nozzles are brought into contact with each other when
