A: Problem is in the verbose log statement. You are logging the password in the verbose log statement: Log.verbose('setting up:'+ configs[0].url); But doing so would result in the same verbose statement to be logged inside the make_change function as well which would result in a race condition and which one would be logged before the other. Rather than logging in verbose statements, log the fact that the password was set in the verbose log statement in the make_change function as shown: Log.verbose('setting up:'+ configs[0].url); Side note: You should be able to simplify your resolve function a bit more by first checking for a 404 code in response, and then continuing with the if statements. This would probably eliminate the failure case. You can remove res.json() calls as well. resolve(function (body, status, headers, configs) { if (status === 204) { return configs[0]; } if (status === 404) { return configs[0]; } if (status!==' 204' && status!==' 404') { return { status: status, body: body }; } }); Side note:
