Camera Technology One of the most basic functions of the camera is to capture light. An incandescent light source will capture visible light (about the only light most people can see). Indoor light is captured by a fluorescent light source. When incandescent and fluorescent lights are turned on, they both create an atmosphere that is rich in visible light. It's captured by both analog and digital cameras. The analog cameras are single-use cameras (like disposable cameras) that measure and store each exposed frame as a single value called an _exposure_, which is how much light has been captured. Digital cameras capture light (photos) as a continuous range of tone or gray-scale levels.

Fumonisin production and accumulation during micropropagation of a worldwide fumonisin-biotype strain of Fusarium verticillioides. A worldwide fumonisin-biotype strain of Fusarium verticillioides collected from maize kernels from a field in Uruguay was micropropagated on rice and corn seeds. On monoculture of rice, corn and maize the strains produced high amounts of fumonisin (FB) (3800, 2000 and 900 microg g(-1) dry biomass, respectively) and low amounts of FB2 (300, 200 and 130 microg g(-1) dry biomass, respectively), but were unable to produce FB3. Toxin production was clearly related to the ability of the fumonisin-biotype strain to produce the 'B' fragment of the trichothecene biosynthetic cluster. In comparison, the fumonisin-a type strain did not produce FB, but accumulated as much FB1 as that produced by the fumonisin-biotype strain. However, it accumulated 13-16 times less FB2 and 20 times less FB3 than the fumonisin-biotype strain. Maize kernels infected with the fumonisin-biotype strain produced FB (1450 microg g(-1) dry mass) and FB2 (700 microg g(-1) dry mass), but not FB3. However, rice kernels infected with the fumonisin-a strain did not produce FB, but accumulated FB1 (900 microg g(-1) dry mass). These results indicate that the previously reported ability of the fumonisin-a type strain to produce FB was a phenotypic mutation that occurred during the process of micropropagation and not related to the presence of a functional trichothecene cluster.Q: How can I access a SOAP web service response with a Python Bindings file?
