The present invention relates to a process for fabricating a semiconductor device, and more particularly to a technique effectively applicable to formation of a silicide region in a semiconductor device. In a semiconductor device, an impurity diffusion layer is formed in a region other than a region in which a circuit has been formed. This impurity diffusion layer is formed in order to provide a surface state as an electrically conducting region, to form a silicide region in the impurity diffusion layer as a silicide region, to form a gate electrode region, or the like. In a common silicide region (silicide region), a silicide region formed of polycrystalline silicon is normally located in a self-aligned manner over a gate electrode. As disclosed, for example, in Japanese Patent Laid-open No. Hei 7-90263, a process for a silicide region has hitherto been known, in which a gate electrode is formed of a polycrystalline silicon film, and thereafter heat treatment is conducted at a temperature of 900° C. for 30 minutes to 5 hours in a mixed atmosphere of oxygen (O2) gas and nitrogen (N2) gas containing a small amount of hydrogen (H2) gas (hereinafter referred to as a mixed atmosphere of O2 gas and N2 gas containing a small amount of H2 gas as gas composition), so as to form a silicide region (silicide region) in an upper portion of the gate electrode. In the conventional process, however, a silicide region is formed in a state in which a polycrystalline silicon region between the impurity diffusion layer and the gate
