[How to use Photoshop] In this Photoshop tutorial, we'll take a look at how to make the dog's eyes that much bigger. Working in Photoshop: 1. In Image > Adjustments > Enhance > Noise, create a new layer, use the Amount setting, and choose a setting between 100 and 300, and set it to Average. 2. Create a new layer and use the Curves tool to create a curve that looks like this: See More Tutorials > 3. Make sure this layer is selected, and then use the Dodge tool to brighten this layer. 4. Create a new layer and draw a box over the image, use the Rectangle tool, and fill it with black. Select the black box, and then hold down the Option (PC) or Alt (Mac) key, and click on the image to move it so the border is only visible on the dog's nose. Note: If you have Layer Styles turned on, you'll find it a bit easier to use this method, instead of dragging the border all the way into the dog's face, which will make it difficult to access for future editing. Tip: You can use the Paste into a new layer button to paste the border into a new layer and easily remove the layer from the image. 5. Create a new layer, and then use the Burn tool to make the black border around the dog stand out more. To do so, use the Burn tool, and set the Temperature to -18, the Opacity to 100%, and the Midtone Contrast to 19. 6. Create a new layer and use the Dodge tool to brighten up the dog a bit. Use the Option (PC) or Alt (Mac) key and click on the dog's black eye. 7. Use the Eraser tool to clean up any part of the image where the dog's face or body has black background, then hold down the Shift key (PC) or Option (Mac) key, click once, and then drag to remove any unwanted areas. 8. Use the Channel Mixer (PC) or Hue/Saturation (Mac) tool to adjust the color of the dog's eyes, making the left one blue and the right one red. Also, use the same tool to adjust the color of the black border on the left side of the dog's nose. 9. Use the

Google is facing antitrust scrutiny across Europe, with the European Commission investigating the company over its Android operating system, search practices, and other matters. Google is under investigation by a European Commission competition regulator over its use of Android, arguably the world's most successful mobile operating system. Europe's antitrust commissioner Margrethe Vestager will hear cases through February. The commission has said it will investigate accusations of "grave concerns for consumers" related to Android. Last year, the company said Google's plans to launch a smart assistant computer called the Google Home would violate European antitrust rules because it would prevent other companies from creating “assistants” for rival smartphones. Google has denied those claims and says it has been “working closely with the commission to make sure we do not exceed our obligations.” The European Commission says it “has reason to believe” that Google’s Android software “has lessened incentives for hardware makers to promote rivals’ devices.” EU competition authorities also are reportedly looking into other practices, including how search ad results favor Google's own products and services. Earlier this week Google signaled it was pulling out of talks with the commission. Google EU director Ignacio Garcia Bercero told a parliamentary committee the commission was "clear that it would not be able to deliver the results that we and our business need." Europe's highest court ordered Google to change how it organizes search results for certain European countries in 2014, in a ruling that affected searches in Spain, Germany, and Austria. Google said it has complied. In its findings, the EU's highest court said that when a consumer typed "Trousers" into a Google search, it listed 11 results, including an advertisement for the manufacturer of the pants. When consumers searched the same term in German, the results included seven manufacturers of trousers. Because of differences in languages, it has always been the case that some search results appear in certain languages, and other results appear in the original language. The ruling wasn't centered on Google search results, but what appeared as search suggestions, which are advertisements that appear in the top three results of a search. One such result was labeled "Product name — Pricewhere,” a hint that Google’s system ranked certain products higher than others. It was based on how often
