This year’s festival runs Friday through Sunday, with special events on Saturday and Sunday, when the theater screening the Danny DeVito film “Throw Momma From the Train” will be held. For four years, the SFF has showcased films about fiction and nonfiction works. This year, the event draws from many points of view, featuring numerous surprises. Saturday will feature a panel discussion on the New York theater scene, featuring playwrights Linda Luyken, Jemma Green and Liz Kim; “Lily’s Guide to Dating in New York: An Insider’s Secrets of the Big Apple,” by Jess Lively; and “How to Survive Your First Month of Not Working While My Husband Works,” by Jo Keel. Also at the event will be a discussion between labor organizer Michael Paterniti and Cornel West about American history.
