Photo by Spencer Platt/Getty Images Standard Chartered Bank, an international money transfer and payments provider based in London, has been fined $270 million by the U.S. Justice Department for allegedly taking part in a vast international money laundering and terrorist financing scheme. The bank, whose largest subsidiary in the U.S. is Standard Chartered Bank New York, has pled guilty to conspiracy to violate the International Emergency Economic Powers Act, money laundering, and a variety of other charges. As a condition of its guilty plea, Standard Chartered will be required to pay $400 million immediately to the United States as part of the criminal forfeiture proceedings, and another $270 million in restitution to several U.S. government agencies. The charges were unsealed after Standard Chartered agreed to cooperate with the government. The bank is currently facing criminal investigations by the Department of Justice in the U.K., U.S., and Luxembourg. The original indictment charged the bank with conspiring to hide billions of dollars in proceeds of the Iran-Contra affair via a network of more than 50 shell companies. That network was used to disguise the scheme as a normal international business transaction, and to protect the identities of those taking part in the money-laundering. The bank has also agreed to pay $550 million to JPMorgan Chase & Co., in a civil settlement relating to transactions that hid funds from the Iran-Contra affair and the influence-peddling scandal involving former Chilean dictator Augusto Pinochet. Standard Chartered Bank was founded in 1863, and is based in London.If you've been missing the good old days of Craig Silverman ripping, or were dismayed that there have been no new fun stories by the one and only Craig Silverman for a while, our boy will be writing for us from time to time, hopefully before he moves to Columbus. A guy breaks into my house, robs me at gun point, and then cuts and shoots the dog in my house and my fucking daughter. If that's not going to do it, I don't know what will. Like I'm gonna let this pass, give my daughter up, and go to prison? When was the last time I did anything like that? She's my one and only child, and my wife was killed by a fucking gang member a few years ago. So this guy is going to make it right by me? "Well, I'm taking care

Q: Select values from postgres table conditionally I have a table with columns: id create_time object_id type I wish to select rows where type is not 1 but where type is not null, how do I do it in PostgreSQL? Is it possible without subquery? A: This SQL SELECT * FROM my_table WHERE type 1 AND type IS NOT NULL; will display all rows where type is not 1, and all records where type is not NULL (if type is NULL then type is equals to 1). .categories.add(cat); } else if (data == 1) { all.categories.add(cat); }
