Q: Should i be using different php versions on different servers I want to host a project on multiple servers. My project uses PHP 5.4.x and also PHP 5.3.3 I know that some PHP bugs have been fixed in 5.4.x compared to 5.3.x For example with some mysql bugs and many other bugs. Should i be developing in PHP 5.4.x and then deploy this on all my servers? Or should i just develop in 5.3.3? Or should I be using the same version of PHP on all servers? A: When developing your software, you can always choose the version you feel most comfortable with. For production, of course, you need to make sure everything is running properly on all environments (so you need to test the production environment as well). My suggestion would be to use whatever version you feel more comfortable developing in, and if you need to switch to a different version later on, that's fine. Sometimes it's easier to use the newest version (or the most stable version of the month) when developing, but sometimes you have to use older versions to be compatible with systems you cannot control (e.g. existing systems already running the exact version you need to support 1cb139a0ed
