Gastric emptying and gastric acid secretion of volatile oil and volatile oil-containing essential oils in rats. Olfactory disturbance following gastric administration of volatile oil (VO) can cause nausea and vomiting. We have already reported that a cyclohexyl alcohol-containing VO (Cy) stimulates gastric acid secretion, resulting in an increase in gastric emptying (GE) in rats. In this study, we investigated the gastric emptying and gastric acid secretion of VO and VO-containing essential oils (EOs) in the absence or presence of atropine in rats. After oral administration of VO or VO containing EOs (0.5 ml) to the same rats, VO inhibited gastric acid secretion and GE in the presence or absence of atropine. On the other hand, VO increased gastric acid secretion and decreased GE in the presence of at
