The invention relates to a fitting for two hydrophilic bodies, with a cavity which is filled with a sealing material. In modern medical technology, a number of branches use pharmaceutically-active materials which have to be sealed relative to the inside of a cavity which has to be filled with a sealing material. Such cavities are, for example, the inside of a hollow organ, in particular a blood vessel or an organ such as the heart, bladder, vessel or chamber of the urinary tract, or the liver, kidney or other organ. A number of documents describe such fittings. For example, U.S. Pat. No. 5,573,580 describes a fitting for a hollow organ, said fitting having a partially spherical housing which is filled with a sealing material, whose surface is essentially unrolled onto a conical or quasi-spherical rear end. For reasons of safety, and in order not to damage the sealing material which is applied in the housing, the housing should be inserted into the cavity to be filled in the hollow organ. The housing must therefore be disposed in the hollow organ before filling the cavity. Such a construction for a fitting for a hollow organ is very difficult to implement and can only be achieved with great outlay. U.S. Pat. No. 3,593,203 describes a fitting for a hollow organ, whose housing is made of a flexible and resilient material and is arranged in the hollow organ such that it is unrolled into a conically or quasi-spherically shaped rounded end. The housing is pressed in, for example by twisting, against the inner wall of the hollow organ. In addition, the housing is pressed in with the assistance of a disk-shaped fixing element, which is surrounded by the housing. For reasons of safety, and in order not to damage the sealing material which is applied in the housing, the housing should be inserted into the hollow organ. The housing must therefore be disposed in the hollow organ before filling the cavity. This construction for a fitting for a hollow organ is also very difficult to implement and is suitable only for use in complicated cases. EP 0 353 655 A1 describes a fitting of the type mentioned in the introduction, in particular a fitting for a blood vessel. The housing is inserted into the blood vessel before the vessel is filled with a sealing material, which has to cover the whole inside of the vessel. This fitting has a housing

Zhao Zongtang Zhao Zongtang (; 10 January 1795 – 12 January 1852) was a Manchu prince of the Qing dynasty who was known for his patronage of the arts and the storyteller Zhang Dechuan. Zhao was born in the Second Princely Capital, Beijing, the eldest son of Empress Dowager Cixi and Zong Ding, the eighth son of Daoguang Emperor. In September 1831, when at age 24 he became the Crown Prince, he was known as Zongxian (). He was given the courtesy name of Hechuan (). In 1833, he took the new name of Zhao, but he reverted to Zongxian in 1837. He studied at the Tien-an-men Academy as well as the Tongwen Guan in Beijing. He had a talent for calligraphy and history and became known as a storyteller, especially for writing biographies of the Yuan emperors and for the poetry of the Song and Ming dynasties. He was praised by the state councilor and the poet Liang Qichao and became a friend and patron of the famous political commentator and editor of the Tiandihui newspaper, Zhang Dechuan. In April 1836, he was created imperial prince () by his father, and in October

1842, he succeeded his father to the throne of the Qing dynasty as Emperor Daoguang. Later, he ordered that Zhang Dechuan be appointed commissioner of art to the capital. The imperial household was a beautiful place, he wrote, and the Emperor was a good head of state. Zhao was said to show a great interest in the arts and employed a host of famous literati and painters, including Zhang Dechuan, Chen Hanyuan, and Wang Zongren. He was known as a patron of the arts and his rule is known as the "golden age of Chinese painting". As crown prince, he was known for his fondness for drinking, and during his reign he gained a reputation for his womanizing. Nevertheless, he was beloved by his wife for his generosity and devotion. Zhao Zongtang died on 12 January 1852. The eldest son, Zongshu Emperor, succeeded him as emperor. Family Father: Zongguo Jixian, the Yongzheng Emperor's ninth son, twice-crowned Prince Gong
