Chrome ad blocker is an extension that can be set up to block online advertising while browsing the web. It's also a great tool for, well, just blocking advertising. This is very useful if you're on a budget, and enjoy the feeling of less advertisements and fake news. Setting up One of the greatest things about this extension is that it's completely free to use. This includes the ability to block ads. To get started, open up the browser and install the extension. Once the extension is installed, it will ask you if you'd like to enable it. The next step is to customize your ad-blocking preference. The preferences are located within your Chrome menu. In the popup, you'll see a list of options for what to do when an ad appears. I suggest selecting "Block ads". It only appears to offer that option, but I prefer to get rid of ads so this option is good enough. If you want to see more options that's fine too. Options Your ad-blocking tool now has some additional features. First, you can choose what type of ads you'd like to block. I suggest the Ads menu. The extension will give you a little pop up with a list of ad types. Be sure to select the one that you want. Otherwise, Ads by Google will be the default ad for all ad-blocked sites. If you'd like to customize this to another type, you can change it in the preferences. Aside from that, this extension offers alternative ways to interact with ads on a page. You can choose to simply close the popup ads, or you can "Keep an eye on" a specific page. You also have the option to star pages, which makes them easier to find in your bookmarks. The Ad

"LeeechBlock NG for Chrome is an easy-to-use extension that can be set up to block any domain, in a certain timeframe. In case you wish to reduce your kid's exposure to social media, stave off distracting past-times, or completely block adult or gambling sites, this neat Chrome add-on can help you with that. Setting block sets up A block set holds all domain names and time intervals decided upon for restricting one's access. Name a block for better identification. Proceed to add the domain you want to be blocked in the designated list, one per line. Scroll down to access the blocks. You can input your own interval, or use the All Day option to block a site the entire day. If there are certain days you'd like to unblock some pages, uncheck their boxes, and you're good to go. How the block manifests and advanced options Once in effect, a block set will deny access to any of the submitted domains. The way the block looks can also be decided by yourself. You can apply filters over a page, so the content cannot be seen, you can instruct the extension to instantly close a tab, or employ other visuals. As for the Advanced Options, these particular assets can help you alter the browser as well, in case a domain you've blocked was accessed. For example, you can prevent access to Chrome's options, extension page, or setting page. Given these points LeechBlock NG for Chrome is a powerful extension with functional and customizable domain blocking features.
