The mobile version of the Google Search app's voice-search feature (also known as Google Voice Search) was made available for Google Android smartphones and tablets with Android 4.2 Jelly Bean or later last year. As of 2016, the feature is available on all models of Google's smartphone operating system, according to the official Google blog. The voice-activated Google Search app's interface has a new "Voice Choices" feature, similar to the one found on the Android standard keyboard. It is activated by saying the name of the person or item you're looking for, for example, "Where's the nearest pizza place?" or "I'm having a party at my house, where's the music I want?" To activate the voice feature, tap and hold the search button at the top of the screen on your Android smartphone or tablet for a few seconds. A microphone icon will appear in the top-right corner, and a microphone symbol will be displayed on the screen. Google's voice-activated search and voice chooser feature works in the same way as other Android apps, but it's not necessary to move your Android smartphone or tablet's cursor around the screen to use the feature. "It's available everywhere, at any time, with just a few taps of the screen," explained Google Android chief Hiroshi Lockheimer, writing on the Google blog. "Whether you're out for a run, or waiting for that next train to arrive, you can hear what people are saying, and reply with what you think is the right response." In addition to searching with a standard keyboard, users can now control the search interface from the touchscreen on their Android phone or tablet. When you want to search with voice, you can choose the type of voice input you prefer. ZoomText, a free Android instant messaging app, has been redesigned for Android smartphones and tablets running Android 4.1 Jelly Bean or later. The latest version of ZoomText allows users to
