Aluminous hydrate (AH) is a major source of aluminous material derived from bauxite ore. The aluminous hydrate is conventionally converted to a calcium aluminates liquid product by chilling the AH to a temperature above the cloud point of calcium aluminate and adding carbon dioxide to permit dissociation of the calcium aluminates into calcium aluminate and aluminates, thereby liberating heat energy. The process is described in U.S. Pat. No. 3,087,738
