SourceTalk is designed as a free and easy to use piece of software that can facilitate the management of the traffic data from show commands, especially that of the show ip accounting and show ip cache flow. The program retrieves the date and time of the last update from the router's database, this updates are saved in a database in a central location, and will be kept there throughout the duration of the program's use. This database is updated daily with the information about the used connection. This allows the user to easily check the data obtained with the command show ip accounting. With the output of the show ip cache flow command, the software also shows the used connections, which allows the user to check how many times was each server used to retrieve the most traffic. The output is formatted in a very professional and easy-to-read format, so that the user can easily process and manage the data. With the program, the user can export the table to a database (in CSV or TXT format), and print a copy of the file (in the same format as shown). The file can then be imported into a spreadsheet application (e.g., Microsoft Excel or Google Spreadsheet) and process. The information can be formatted in a very professional and easy-to-read format. The program works with the following commands: show ip accounting show ip cache flow show ip route show ip bgp show ip nat show ip pim show ip mld show ip http show ip http proxy show ip l2 switch show ip mrouted show ip policy show ip quota Show SourceTalk Technologies: Request a Web Demo: Figure 1 shows the interface and its current settings. The VSAT connection interface Configure the PA and PC ports VSAT (Asynchronous Transmission Mode) is provided by the company ILE (Integrated Logic Equipment) for 8/16/32QAM modulation, which can be obtained from the manufacturer's website. Transmission by VSAT is typically by synchronous modulation, where the modulation and demodulation are performed in a single process. This type of transmission is used in satellite communication. The modulation is the process of converting binary signals into analog signals that can be transmitted. The demodulation is the process that converts the received analog signals back into binary signals. What's New In SourceTalk?

Using SourceTalk, you can easily sort the output of the'show IP accounting' and'show IP cache flow' commands on the Cisco IOS routers / switches. The maximum number of lines you can process is limited only by your system. SourceTalk provides an interactive interface for all routes you want to process. Once you have identified the source of the highest traffic on a connection you can export the result of the analysis to various 'CSV' or 'HTML' formats, which can be then used either in Excel or any other spreadsheet / charting program. SourceTalk Features: Easily sort the entire results you obtain from'show IP accounting' and'show IP cache flow' commands on Cisco IOS routers / switches. Process up to 100 000 lines of traffic data. Export the results to various 'CSV' or 'HTML' formats. Process only the commands you wish to analyze. Quickly identify the source of the highest traffic on a connection, the destination of the highest traffic on a connection and the unique connection that is going through the largest amount of traffic.
