Italy, Germany and more. Composition of mineralizing dental matrix in the mouse incisor as seen by 3-dimensional Fourier transform infrared microscopy. The mineralizing dental matrix in mouse incisors, initially consisting of dentin, was examined in its entirety by Fourier transform infrared microscopy, as well as in the regions of predentin and dentin. The samples were taken from the incisors of 10-day-old C57BL/6J mice treated with aminobisphosphonates (ALN and AP) to induce matrix mineralization. The mineralized tissue of the incisors was similar in structure to the mineralized enamel of the teeth. Maturation of the mineralized matrix was observed in all parts of the tooth, and the mineral composition of the enamel-like tissue is close to that of the mature mineralized enamel. Fluoride-induced mineralization of mouse incisors was of similar organization, but there were minor differences in the nature of the mineralized tissue. This study demonstrated the potential for 3-dimensional Fourier transform infrared microscopy to examine the mineral composition of the mineralized dental matrix in situ and in its entirety. 1.

Field of the Invention The present invention relates to a terminal accommodating portion and a method of producing the terminal accommodating portion. More specifically, the present invention relates to a method of producing a terminal accommodating portion, which is useful for producing a terminal accommodating portion having an undercut portion formed by opening and closing a plurality of opening portions formed in a terminal accommodating portion, and relates to a method of producing a terminal-accommodating portion having a plurality of opening portions. 2. Description of the Related Art An electric connector used for connecting wire harnesses of various kinds of automobiles or industrial machines is required to be compact and light-weight. In a terminal accommodating portion of the electric connector, if the terminal accommodating portion is provided with an under-cut portion formed by opening and closing the opening portion of the terminal accommodating portion, in order to arrange the wire harnesses or cables to be connected in a narrow space, an undercut portion
