The present invention relates to a thermal recording apparatus, and more particularly to a thermal recording apparatus of the type wherein a thermal head is pressed against the paper sheet or film on which an image is recorded. The following describes a conventional thermal recording apparatus of the type having a thermal head and a platen holder as its components. The thermal head and the platen holder are formed of ceramic or similar heat resistant material such as alumina. The thermal head is mounted in a predetermined position in a housing by way of a single support member. The thermal head, the holder, and the support member are connected together by means of caulking. In this arrangement, however, a stress is applied to the platen holder after being caulked, resulting in breakage of the platen holder or the thermal head. This problem may be solved by so designing the thermal head or the platen holder that the head or holder can withstand the caulking force without breakage. However, in this case, the caulking force exerted on the head or holder becomes larger, resulting in breaking of a material or wear of the platen holder.

Q: Get same JSON from server in JavaScript I've just started learning JavaScript, been about a year, but the best way I can describe my problem is by saying I can send objects over the web from client to server with GET requests with no problem (using a JSONObject), the server understands the request and responds with the correct information in the JSON format. When I try and receive the same JSON structure back from the server with a POST request, I get an error in the C# class. I put a breakpoint and can see that the JSON is being received back in the correct format but when I try and set a value to an object, it's always null. If I step over the line of code I'm trying to set the value, the objects have the correct values stored in them. The C# class
