For The Love of Roses is a relaxing music video. It was a very interesting experience creating this music video. I had to follow a story line, have people acting out the video and tell a story that they need to be followed. This is my interpretation of the meaning of the song. This video is one of my very first, so there's room for improvement. One of the things that I noticed was the bouncing ball. I would definitely do that better in the future. More work needs to be done but I am glad with the result. I did not expect people to watch it and comment positively. I will definitely upload another video. I would also like to thank everyone that has liked the video and added their own personal interpretation of the song. * The purpose of this document is to provide a brief summary of the requirements for publishing to a custom security zone and guide you to the concepts that must be considered before publishing to a custom security zone. Before you start with creating a custom security zone, make sure that you understand the concepts of publishing to the Internet and publishing to an intranet. Custom Security Zone Concepts A custom security zone is a defined region within the network that is protected by a different security policy from other zones within the network. You can create a custom security zone in one of two ways:

- a. The zone administrator can specify a zone in the Group Policy Editor
- b. The zone administrator can specify a zone in the Local Security Policy

For the purpose of this guide, we will use an example based on the option (b). You can use a zone administrator to specify a zone as a Group Policy setting or in the Local Security Policy. In the Local Security Policy, the Customizable section has the Security Zones option. You can specify a security zone by entering the Security Zone name in the zone name box. This will allow you to apply a different set of settings to the zone than the default settings. You can find the group policy settings for a custom security zone by checking the "Specify this policy as a Group Policy setting" option. To do this, right-click on the "Customizable" node in the Security Zones list and select "Apply Group Policy" Additional information about custom security zones can be found in the following guide: Customizing Security Zones Setting up a Custom Security Zone When a custom security zone is created, a specific network configuration is created. The customized network configuration will be applied to all devices and computers that are in the zone. The following is a brief overview of the components that make up a security zone.

Components of a Security Zone

A security zone is made up of several components. These components include:

- a. Scope

The scope component is the interface that a device or computer will use to join the zone. There are three types of scopes:

- a. Internet
- b. Intranet
- c. External
- d. Private

For this example, we will only cover the Intranet and External scopes. If you are using the Intranet scope, then all computers on the intranet will be part of the zone. If you are using the external scope, then you can specify which machines on the network are allowed to access the zone. Customizing Scope Scope must be configured at the zone level. This means that the group policy settings for the scope should be specified at the zone level. To configure the scope, right-click on the scope name in the Local Security Policy, and select "Apply Group Policy". Additional information about scope can be found in the following guides: Specifying a Scope Integrating Direct
