Its main focus is to import data from text files, in a tabular form into SQL Server 2000, 2000, 2005 and 2008. It reads the text file lines, parses them into columns and builds a INSERT statement into a sql text string, all by itself. The text files do not need to be delimited by Tabs or Spaces or any other character. Any character will do and multiple files can be imported. There is no limit to the number of rows that can be imported. The limits will be the limitations of the SQL server. The application will strip out any character in the text file that will be interpreted as a backspace character, or a character that is equivalent to a carriage return. Any backspace or carriage return will be removed. Multiple lines can be imported. If the input is a file where each line is a separate tab separated set of data, then each line will be a separate row in the input file. If the input is a file where each line has multiple tab separated sets of data, then each set of data will be imported as a separate row. The application will always ask you if you want to see the SQL statement before attempting to import it. If you don't see it, or if you are unsure about what is being imported, or if you don't want to see it, then type "Yes" and the application will not import anything. In most cases, you will be amazed at the size of the SQL statement that is generated, for some of the smaller files, the full statement is only a few lines long, for some, it is many lines, but the full statement can be manually edited to your hearts content. To use Tab2Sql: Run the application, select the file to be imported. There is a Tab 2 field to the left. Simply put the characters of your text file into the field. Press the OK button. If you want to import multiple files, just hit the "Continue" button. That's it, it does the rest. The application will check to see if the import has completed. If it has, you will be presented with a "Start Importing" message, else it will just display the import completed message. You can select the file to be imported again, and just hit the "Continue" button. If you choose to continue the import from a prior import, the application will just import from the point that it was left off 1d6a3396d6

Considering they've finished 3rd, 4th, and 5th in the East since 2012, this seems like the most likely outcome. But the question is, will this be the year they get it done? Offseason Moves Adam Kennedy, the replacement for Cary Williams, was injured during training camp. This has put the team in a bind. They'll need to move someone to fill the spot, and they'll need to do so by 1/22. They did well by themselves. They signed WR De'Andre Thompkins, who had 39 catches for 556 yards in 2017. Their biggest offseason pickup was DT Jonathan Allen, who will help their run defense. Projection The story of the Cardinals in 2018: They're still the Cardinals. They'll still be an effective team. But their division lead will be short lived, and they'll miss the playoffs. It's designed to take as much of the coding pain out of the process of importing data into SQL Server and make it as easy as possible. The only requirement is that the data must be tab delimited, and it's possible to create and edit data in Excel and manually import it into your SQL server. It would be nice if there was an easy way to add data to the SQL Server and have it just import it. This application allows you to easily do this by pasting the contents of the text file into a TextBox, and then you simply use the ToSqlButton to produce the SQL Statement that will import the data from the TextBox. It's pretty easy to use, although there are some questions about the import as follows: Why it is not possible to edit the table name and add a new column to the import. The data is hard coded in the program. The form has a button that allows you to get the sql statement from a TextBox. Is there a way to pass the data in the textbox to a command of some sort so that the statement can be generated. Why is there no way to pass the table name to the program from another source so that the sql statement can be generated Why is it not possible to change the " to "" (double quotes) so that the data can be imported into a string. The source data is hard coded in the program Why is it not possible to modify the destination connection string Why is it not possible to add a new column to the table if the table name and destination column name is known Why is it not possible to open a new connection to a different database?
