The judge sided with the Leavenworth County Jail, where Cole Duran was arrested in March 2012. Duran, a convicted felon, was accused of committing the violent felony of aggravated battery while a person in custody. "The Court has reviewed the evidence. The evidence does not demonstrate that Mr. Duran was treated differently than any other pre-trial detainee," Judge Daniel Crabtree said in his ruling, according to the Topeka Capital-Journal. "Nor has the Plaintiff demonstrated that he was treated differently than any other pre-trial detainee that was placed in the Adjustment Unit. Although he (Duran) may have been treated differently than inmates who did not suffer a broken leg, the Plaintiff cannot show that the difference in treatment was based on his race or that it amounted to an equal protection violation," Crabtree added. Duran's family sued the county on his behalf in May 2013 after he broke his leg in a matter of seconds. Duran, who was incarcerated on a drug charge, said he was put in a dark cell after being released from the hospital. He claims that he didn't know that a wall of his cell had been painted over with chalk because the paint was no longer dry. A guard then searched the room, removed Duran from his cell and placed him back in his cell. Duran says he lost consciousness
