Staphylococcus epidermidis isolates were characterized for the presence of staphylococcal protein A and their potential to form biofilm on plastic substrates. Of 121 isolates studied 45 (38.46%) were reactive with protein A. The frequency of protein A was high (84.2%) in isolates from patients with long term indwelling catheters. Of the non-reactive group (55) 24 (44.44%) were also non-biofilm forming. The biofilm forming ability of these isolates was checked by microtitre plate adherence assay and biofilm formation was found to be associated with the presence of protein A. Overall, the presence of protein A was found to be associated with biofilm forming ability. These results suggest that non-biofilm forming isolates may be at an increased risk of biofilm formation on catheters and biomaterials. Cleveland Browns off-season plans start in about a month. That means there are going to be a lot of questions swirling around Brown-Snyder during this entire process. Should they hire a new head coach? What will the coaching staff look like? These are all interesting discussions, but the one that I think is most pertinent to the Browns' future is the quarterback position. In other words, which man will step up and take the reigns when the new coach is installed in January? I'm going to lay out three different scenarios and just like the coin toss this spring, Brown-Snyder will probably look quite different by the time we're done with them. 1. Baker Mayfield Baker Mayfield has had an incredible rookie season and has more upside than anyone on the roster. At 6-foot-2, Mayfield is big and does a good job of making plays with his arm and legs. He has fit the offense well and the Browns should look to keep him and let him sit and learn. Mayfield is going to be a special talent, but I think the Browns would be a bad team if they kept him 570a42141b
