Official Website: Win 1: Win 2: Win 3: Bugs: Feedback: escalation protocol for image-guided neurosurgery: feasibility study. Routine dose saving strategies for image-guided surgery remain controversial. This study explored the feasibility and outcome of a dose escalation protocol for image-guided neurosurgery. A total of 26 patients were enrolled and underwent image-guided neurosurgical procedures. The patients were treated using the standard protocol (reference group, n = 8) and dose escalation protocol (protocol group, n = 18). The reference group received one or two doses of 140-150 MBq of (18)F-FDG for whole-body positron emission tomography (PET) imaging, while the protocol group received two doses of 150-155 MBq of (18)F-FDG (inclusion group). The mean administered activity was 147.1 +/- 23.9 MBq for the reference group and 156.8 +/- 27.8 MBq for the protocol group. The mean radiation dose to the normal tissue was 5.8 +/- 1.9 mSv for the reference group and 8.5 +/- 3.2 mSv for the protocol group. The protocol group had a higher incidence of minor adverse events, but the differences were not statistically significant. The dose escalation protocol showed no significant effect on the incidence of minor adverse events during the image-guided neurosurgery. This dose-escalation technique would be useful for continuing the radiation dose in image-guided neurosurgery.
