* Stills. Create multiple layers, each named for the picture source, for each version of your image. While you can choose to work directly on the layer named for the source you use to shoot the image, many effects can be achieved without affecting the base layers. * Editing. Composite one version of your image on top of another, complete with all the layers of each version intact. * Creating textures. Mix basic color from various parts of the image with pastel-like hues. * Transforming. Transform your image by using different blending modes, by cropping the edges of the image and stretching it, and by cutting and pasting existing portions of the image. * Filters. Create text, remove elements, turn an object into a painting, paint with color, lighten or darken it—the list of Photoshop filters is nearly endless. * Effects. With filters and the smudge and sharpen tools, you can give your image a grunge, painterly, or watercolor style. * Organizing. The Organizer module lets you quickly access each photo in your folder, whether it's organized by date or event. You can even apply the same edits to multiple images at the same time by selecting multiple files in the Organizer. * Layer Editing. You can change the colors on a layer, do a great many kinds of masking, and remove, move, or combine any single part of an image. * Web. Create a Web-ready JPEG or TIFF file for posting to the World Wide Web.

Young football fans must be careful around older people due to the dementia risk it puts them at, experts have said. The new campaign, Protecting the Young, was launched at the British Psychological Society's annual conference in London and offers advise on how to "protect your loved ones from dementia risk". It stresses the importance of making sure younger family members are being exposed to stimulating activities and environments, including the outdoors. This was most effective for children aged between five and seven, as it was during this age that the brain grows the most, and memories and learning are well-developed. The campaign is being organised by the Professional Association of Dementia Care in England (PADCIE), an organisation which describes dementia as "the biggest health problem facing the nation". Dementia is the second most common cause of death in the UK after heart disease and has an estimated half a million cases in the UK. Around 850,000 people are currently living with dementia, with many more who do not recognise they have the disease. PADCIE's chief executive, Dr Samantha Stanley, said: "It's a shocking thought that young people are actually at greater risk of developing dementia later in life. "You are now fighting the clock and the damage done could be irreversible. "We need to embrace the idea of older generations not moving out and younger ones not moving in. The younger generation need to remember what it was like to grow up without all the technological advances that are available. "Too many children are not being exposed to stimulating activities like sports and music, which can be beneficial to their cognitive development. "This is worrying because it reduces the exposure to childhood memories that could help build the brain up to protecting it from dementia. "And we know how difficult it can be to speak to a family member who may be suffering from dementia, particularly if they are in the early stages, so you need to make that phone call. "We're launching this campaign to get the message across to younger people that their grandparents and parents are the best role models in life. "Old people, and especially the elderly, can have dementia and their families need to be aware of the signs that something is not right." Dr Stanley added: "We know that the earlier the age you start
