“HyperMotion Technology brings a new level of realism to FIFA,” said Peter Guber, President of EA SPORTS. “Through technology we’ve developed on the FIFA platform over the past decade we can now improve players’ perception of themselves on the pitch, allowing the CPU to represent the player’s skills and attributes to an even greater degree.” “At EA SPORTS we are always developing new ways to improve gameplay on all our sports titles and FIFA 22 demonstrates our ongoing commitment to this goal,” said David Rutter, Chief Product Officer at EA SPORTS. “The addition of HyperMotion Technology builds upon the real-life data assets we have now, while giving the player a more immersive experience on the pitch.” Accuracy and the Attention to Detail FIFA 22 delivers gameplay that is more detailed than ever, and allows the player to have more involvement in the on-the-pitch action. High-end graphics, gameplay and player animations have been improved across the board, and many new visual effects have been added including crowd animation and AI behaviour. Improved player animations deliver more detail and timing, while the animation tools have been improved to allow for more player and ball movement fluidity and expressions. Every tackle, shot and shot on goal now features unique animations, giving players more animated and lifelike on-the-pitch interactions and visuals. All AI and referee actions are now animated, and the likeness of the player and the referee has been improved, bringing the referee into more of the action to better convey the experience of the on-pitch competition. Improved Player Motion FIFA 22 highlights players’ speed and movement off the ball with improved player and ball movement, while ball control is improved by adding the ability to drift the ball with the Shift and Control Stick when dribbling. Improved camera view options give a broader perspective on the pitch, and zooming out or choosing a close-up view allows for more player movement as the camera zooms into the action. Graphics give players more detail, while player movement and animations are improved. Improved Player Interaction Over the years, the way that the game is played on the pitch has evolved and changed. With FIFA 22, EA SPORTS has introduced a new class of player movement and interaction that are more intuitive to help the player feel like an extension of the ball.
