Images.A few years ago, my dreams were diverted by an old, bitter woman holding the most beautiful painted rose. She had gone to the trouble of scattering a little of her own blood on the white petals of the flower, and dying it a fresh, dark red. It was a beautiful rose, one of the most poignant and beautiful objects I had ever seen, the star of a lifelong search, a remnant of my mother in her late eighties and my own mortality. I stared at the rose, trying to memorize it and failing, but it was the weight of its simplicity, the obviousness of its purpose and meaning, that drew my attention. She needed that rose to make peace with the world and her own life. When I opened my eyes from my dream, the rose was still before me, and I knew it was not a chance encounter. I was drawn to this woman by my dreams, and in the dream I knew we shared a deeper connection, a bond beyond any words. I was drawn to her by an instinct, a rising in my soul, a sense of destiny. I was not meant to meet that woman in my dream, but I knew, the same way I knew that I had been born to paint, she was destined to live, to die, and to make a deep
