we are completely wrong, and it is their right to prove us wrong. But they don't have proof... So, seriously, what is it with people that refuse to acknowledge the obvious (just FYI) - sounds a lot like Creationist that refuse to accept and acknowledge the scientific evidence for Evolution. Oh, I agree with you. That's not the issue here. I'm asking about the usage of the term "once upon a time". As you can see, I am using it in a different way than you are, and I think I am correct. That is exactly what I was thinking. I've never heard you say that you believe in evolution and that it's "obvious" until you wrote this post. However, I've never seen you use the word "once upon a time" in the way you use it in this post. Originally Posted by Invisible Man What we have are contradictions: 1. But it's not, it's just a theory. I was pointing out how you used those words incorrectly, to mean "once upon a time", meaning something that happened "a long time ago". 4. You asked for evidence, and I'll tell you in no uncertain terms that you will never get it. You will never "get" the answer, because until you die, you will never "see" the evidence. I didn't say that you would never "see it", only that you will never "get it", because that is not possible without a mechanism like a scientific experiment in motion. 5. ## What's New In Adobe Photoshop Elements 4.0 Download?

Southampton made a half-hearted attempt to get back into the game after the break and, when goalkeeper Jack Butland rolled a low free-kick onto his own bar at the near post, his marker was left all alone. It was no more than Stoke deserved but they will feel this was in many ways the game's turning point. It was a performance which showed their confidence was quickly draining after a season to forget in which there have been questions over their credentials as genuine title challengers. Stoke, who have lost only three matches in the Premier League, were transformed. The defence was solid, dominant and full of attacking threat. It was also a team which excelled in possession and countered quickly. Southampton were often ponderous in their approach and were lulled into a false sense of security. With Collins John only playing for United because he wanted to look after a sick mother, Spurs centre-half Jan Vertonghen was pushed up front, handed the ball and allowed to cause havoc. An early injury to the experienced John is not the worst thing the Spurs players could have faced. It just makes Stoke's victory all the more impressive. It would be hard to say there are any weaknesses in the side and that is why a fourth title in five seasons has come their way. The Premier League's nickname of the best league in the world should not be an empty one. Adsorption of hexavalent chromium to natural zeolites from industrial effluents: adsorption characteristics and characterization of Cr-loaded zeolite. A range of adsorbents used for treatment of effluents from industry were characterized for their suitability for the treatment of hexavalent chromium containing effluents. The characterization of natural zeolites revealed that the zeolite powder was stable at a pH range of 6-10, while the modified natural zeolites were stable at pH range of 4-8. Characterization of modified natural zeolites by FTIR, FESEM, and BET analysis showed an increase in surface area with an increase in Si/Al ratio. TGA analysis showed that the modified natural zeolites had been loaded with Cr(VI) better than unmodified zeolites. Batch tests were carried out to study the ability of modified natural zeolites to remove Cr(VI) ions from an industrial wastewater containing high concentration of Cr(VI). High binding capacity of modified natural zeolites to Cr(VI) was demonstrated
