Clean, simple user interface. Simple installation The executable isn't too big and the setup package is a small bundle of only 8Kb. It's a small but useful program. The interface is quite simple, showing a small window in the top-left corner of your desktop. It also has a small status bar in the bottom-right corner to show you when the program is updating the last page, along with the name of the website you've selected. With a little practice, it's easy to memorize all the options in the application. The simplest way to get started is to simply type or paste the address of your chosen news website. Import and export RSS feeds There are various ways to choose the RSS feeds you want to monitor. You can choose the URL from your bookmarks, open a shortcut on your desktop or paste the link in the main window. You can also export feeds from the program and import them to RSS reader if you like. This way, you can easily update the content on your own news aggregator. This function works nicely, but you don't have the ability to specify the number of feeds you want to export or import. Copy-and-paste. You can find the clipboard button on the toolbar of the main window, which saves your work if you want to use it in other programs. You can also control the rate at which the program fetches the RSS and RDF feeds by clicking the corresponding icon, which shows the rate of the last update. Evaluation and conclusion This is a handy RSS news aggregator that doesn't demand too much of your time or CPU power.
