The following corollary represents the final goal of this paper. \[cor:main_nsc\] Let p,q,r,s be nonnegative integers with $p+q+r+s=3$. Let $H,F_1,\dots,F_s\in C_{0}^\infty([0,\infty)^3)$ and $F=F_1+\dots+F_s\in C_{0}^\infty([0,\infty)^3)$. Let P be a polynomial which satisfies Assumption \[hypo:main_assump\]. If the total degree of P does not exceed r, then the following asymptotic expansion holds true for large enough $t\in(0,\infty)$, $$\begin{aligned} &\int_{0}^t\int_{\mathbb{R}^3} \Phi_{p+q+1}(x){}^{\circ_x^{n_1}}\partial_1^{\delta_1}P(x)\,dx\,dt \nonumber \\ &\qquad\qquad\qquad\quad=\int_{0}^t\int_{\mathbb{R}^3} \Phi_{p+q+1}(x){}^{\circ_x^{n_1}}\partial_1^{\delta_1}F_1(x,t)\,dx\,dt+\mathcal{O}\left(t^{n+p+q}\right), \label{eq:main_nsc_eq1} \\ &\int_{0}^t\int_{\mathbb{R}}\end{aligned}$$

By applying the coating to each individual element, the optical properties can be precisely controlled, and thermal expansion effects in the coating can be reduced. Over the years these coating machines were made more efficient and there were made smaller. However, such machines continue to apply the coating to one element at a time. The coating must be kept separate from other coatings, which can lead to imperfections and unevenness in the coating. This can result in high losses in light transmission, and losses in light efficiency are particularly critical to modern, high-quality and highly productive film and video cameras. The film and video industry has been attempting to overcome these limitations by using coaters capable of applying different layer thicknesses of the coating in situ. However, existing coaters have not been capable of applying a complete array of coatings to a plurality of optical elements simultaneously, effectively decreasing production time and costs in the field. In addition, the resulting coatings can have unevenness and defects. This is particularly true of electron beam evaporators, which are used to apply certain types of coatings such as anti-reflection coatings. It is an object of the present invention to provide a method and apparatus for producing, on a substrate, a multitude of optical elements having a specific shape and size, and having a uniform coating on the surface.
